She stared at the digital calendar at her bedside. It read Sunday. She jumped out of bed, now wide awake. She ran to her desk, switched on her laptop, and checked the calendar at the bottom right corner.

Sunday, 10 January 2016.

She opened Google, typed in 'local time', and hit enter.

Anna, got up to an unfamiliar face. The only thing she could make out was it was a boy's.

"Hello. Are you awake?"

Chapter 2 by Katie Switzer

"What happened?" she said.

Then it hit her, this was the day of her parents horrible death. Well yesterday, she was still living in the house. Today was the day that she would find out who would have her until she was old enough to live on her own.

"Anna?" the voice said again.

"David? Oh my god I have missed you." she enthusiastically exclaimed.

David is Anna's older brother, they had a very strong bond when she was growing up. But their parents threw him out when he wanted to pursue music instead of going to Harvard like his father. David had come down for the funeral, he hated the family after no one took him in, or stood up for him.

"Get dressed, I'll make breakfast." David said.
